

“Saving America’s Horses, A nation Betrayed” will serve to restore respect and dignity to one of our country’s most majestic animals. I have the utmost confidence in Katia Louise as a filmmaker and believe she’s the best person to bring this film to the screen. I have had the honor of observing Katia’s extraordinary passion, dedication and talent first hand while working together with her on this film as well as another project. She has collectively assembled an exceptional crew and advisory board which I believe will further advance the success of this project. I believe that this documentary film will prove to be quite an important and invaluable resource and will address so very many issues and will do so with authoritative information and analysis. This feature length presentation promises to be relatable and understandable to people on a multitude of levels. I believe it will reach across a wide demographic, from specialized experts to the general public at large. Most importantly, this film will capture the interest and attention of anyone with a heart.”- Paula Bacon

Member, America’s Against Horse Slaughter

Americans Against Horse Slaughter is a non funded, grassroots movement comprised of supporters of a federal ban on the slaughter of American horses for human consumption. People from all walks of life and from all parts of the country have joined together to form AAHS. We have no other agenda, other than to stop the slaughter of American horses.

As a mayor who lived with this plague in her town for many years, who knows what the horse slaughter industry really is and what it does to a community please allow me to tell you what we experienced. The industry caused significant and long term hardship to my community which was home to Dallas Crown, one of the last three horse slaughter plants in the United States.

There is no justification for horse slaughter in this country. My city was little more than a door mat for a foreign-owned business that drained our resources, thwarted economic development and stigmatized our community. Americans don't eat horses and we don't raise them for human consumption. There is no justification for spending American tax dollars to support this industry at the expense of Americans and our horses. – Former Mayor Paula Bacon
